Accomplished Orthopedic Surgeon joins ONS Sports Medicine Team

GREENWICH, CT (Oct. 14, 2015) – Orthopaedic and Neurosurgery Specialists (ONS) on Valley Drive has announced that orthopedic surgeon and fellowship-trained hand, wrist, and upper extremity specialist David H. Wei, MD has joined the ONS team. Dr. Wei has expertise in the diagnosis and treatment of conditions such as arthritis, upper extremity fractures, sports injuries of the hand, wrist and elbow, and nerve compression syndromes like carpal tunnel and cubital tunnel. He is surgically skilled in the microsurgical nerve reconstruction and arthroscopic treatment of wrist and elbow disorders. He has successfully treated many patients with Dupuytren's contracture using Xiaflex, a non-operative injectable enzyme to treat the condition that causes fingers to curl inward to the palm of the hand.

Dr. Wei earned his medical degree at Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons. He did his internship and residency at the Columbia University Medical Center and received Fellowship training in Hand and Upper Extremity Surgery at Tufts University Medical Center, New England Baptist Hospital in Boston, MA.

“Dr. Wei will be a great asset to our practice as we meet the growing demand for specialized orthopedic care in Fairfield and Westchester counties,” said Dr. Seth Miller. “His considerable training and accomplishments reflect the ONS standard of offering the highest level of care to our patients.”

An event at Greenwich Hospital will feature Dr. Wei on Tuesday, November 10, at 6:00 p.m. He will discuss the causes and treatments for a variety of conditions affecting the elbow, including “tennis elbow,” “golfer’s elbow,” ligament injuries from sports involving throwing, and disabling elbow arthritis.
